

Best Practices to Support International Students

Did you know that UCLA is ranked in the top 10 for the number of international students at U.S. institutions of higher education? UCLA serves international students from over 120 countries, and many more cultures from around the world. Consider utilizing these best practices to support international students on your campus.

Perceive international students as assets to the campus community

Integration is key: connect students to resources and people

Be mindful of cultural differences

Assist with decoding: popular culture, slang, and terminology

Non-verbal behaviors are important

Think twice when making assumptions

Remain curious and create space for feedback
