ECONOMICS LEARNED, NOT TAUGHT.
I was in the psychology program, but I found myself suddenly feeling uninterested in the subject matter. I decided to explore other majors and interests.

I applied to several other universities, but I received a rejection letter from one of my top choices. This was a setback, but I decided to stay positive and apply to other schools.

In the meantime, I started volunteering at a local charity, which gave me a sense of purpose and fulfillment. I also began writing for a local newspaper, which helped me develop my writing skills.

Finally, after months of hard work and dedication, I received an acceptance letter from a small liberal arts college in the South. I was overjoyed and couldn't wait to start my new adventure.

I moved in with a roommate and got involved in student organizations. I discovered a passion for politics and decided to major in political science.

Looking back, I realize that the rejection letter was a turning point in my life. It taught me to be resilient and to pursue my passions. I am grateful for the experiences that led me to where I am today.
This was a time I had several dozen of hours. Questioning the
